Castle’s early pieces, often carved from single blocks of wood, displayed a remarkable sensitivity to material and form. His embrace of organic, biomorphic shapes was a departure from the more rigid, geometric designs prevalent at the time. Castle was at the forefront of this redefinition, transforming functional objects into expressive artworks. His exploration of materials is particularly noteworthy:

The Mastery of Laminated Wood

Perhaps more than any other material, laminated wood became Castle's signature medium. He developed techniques to bend and sculpt wood into fluid, organic forms that defied traditional woodworking conventions.
