Kindergarten and First Grade: The Building Blocks of Safety

For our youngest Daisies, the focus is on foundational safety concepts. These often include:

1. Home Safety: Understanding basic rules like not talking to strangers, staying away from the stove, and knowing what to do in case of a fire alarm. Discussions might involve identifying safe zones within the home and practicing calling for help.

2. Street Safety: Learning about looking both ways before crossing the street, walking with an adult, and recognizing safe places to play. This is also a great time to introduce the concept of "stranger danger" in a way that is empowering, not frightening.
3. Water Safety: Basic rules around pools and bathtubs, emphasizing that water is fun but requires adult supervision.
4. Internet Safety for Young Children: Simple rules about not sharing personal information online and talking to a trusted adult about what they see.

Leaders and parents will find that activities like role-playing, drawing pictures of safe scenarios, and singing safety songs are highly effective for this age group.

Second and Third Grade: Expanding Safety Horizons

As Brownies progress, their understanding of safety deepens, incorporating more nuanced situations:

1. Personal Safety: This might involve learning about personal boundaries, understanding the "no, go, tell" strategy for uncomfortable situations, and practicing how to say "no" assertively.
2. Safety During Outdoor Activities: Discussions about staying with the group on hikes, recognizing poisonous plants, and understanding the importance of wearing appropriate clothing and footwear.

Brownies might engage in scavenger hunts for safety items, create safety posters, or participate in simulated first aid scenarios.

Fourth and Fifth Grade: Developing Independence and Awareness

Juniors are ready for more complex safety discussions and practical applications:

1. Home Alone Safety: Rules and procedures for when a girl is home alone for short periods, including emergency contact information and what to do in various scenarios.
